Overview

Nassau County Demographic Report

Overview:

Demographics operation examined the three towns of Nassau County, New York in an effort to identify the existence of population centers and business districts of communities of interest.

This examination further identified locations. These locations provide the maximum ability to assess the general opinions and general activity of these communities.

Summary:

The Demographics examination identified a considerable Indian population in the examined area of Nassau County as well as a growing Pakistani and Bangladeshi representation within the South Asian population. Hindu and Sikh Indians still dominate the South Asian communities of Hicksville and New Hyde Park. The community of Elmont has a growing Muslim population with a large Pakistani and Guyanese component.

There is a significant Iranian population in the communities of Great Neck and Kings Point the majority of which are Persian Jews. No Shia Muslim representation was identified during the operation.

The Demographics examination successfully identified persons of Arab descent, however the population is dispersed throughout the county and not concentrated enough to support commercial establishments such as cafés, restaurants or specialized grocery locations.

A Turkish population was identified within the county, this community has several locations, which are not localized in any one area but spread throughout the county.
